Greater Bay Area to build 15,000 km expressway network

The Guangdong-Hong Kong-Macao Greater Bay Area (GBA) will have preliminarily built an expressway network spanning 15,000 kilometers by 2035, according to Guangdong Province's expressway network planning.

Shenzhen, a core city in the GBA, has seen its highway mileage growing rapidly. According to the city's transport bureau, during the 14th Five-Year Plan period (2021-2025), Shenzhen will speed up the construction of the Shenzhen-Zhongshan Link, the second Shenzhen-Shantou Expressway and Phase III of the Outer Ring Expressway.

The city will work on the expansion and reconstruction of road sections with heavy traffic such as Jihe-Huiyan Expressway and Shenzhen-Shantou Expressway. It is expected that the mileage of the newly built, reconstructed and expanded expressways will exceed 150 kilometers.

By the end of the five-year period, the mileage of Shenzhen's expressways will reach 425 kilometers, which will strongly support the high-quality development of the GBA and Shenzhen metropolitan circle.

Statistics show that the GBA's expressway mileage that is open to traffic has exceeded 4,500 kilometers so far. Additionally, 13 new routes will be added to the Guangzhou-Shenzhen-Hong Kong-Macao Science and Technology Innovation Corridor in the future, according to the GBA's relevant traffic planning.

The project is expected to be opened to traffic in 2024. After completion, it will form a cross-sea and cross-river passage network in the GBA together with the Hong Kong-Zhuhai-Macao Bridge, Shenzhen-Zhongshan Link, Nansha Bridge and Humen Bridge.

The sea channel project runs about 31 kilometers, where the cross-sea section is about 14 kilometers. Two super large cable-stayed bridges, two tunnels and four interchanges will be set up.
